Here and There.
This is the Democrat's birthday! Just observe the heading and the number of the volume. You will learn that to-day the Democrat becomes a nonagenarian, but, we trust, a pretty active one. You see the Democrat is masculine, or it would not have a birthday—only an anniversary; but it is masculine, is ninety years old and doesn't care who knows it. It was a baby when there were only a few columns to the page in its earlier days. The other columns have been added to its stature with the years. It printed no local news when born, only propaganda; they did not call it that in 1833. That and other features have come one by one with the years. They were the teeth of the child and adult which gripped its readers, and they may be more to follow.
